

Camorra Aid's Escape Charged To U.S. Officials

Fiaschetti Says Prisoner Held for Deportation to Italy as Slayer Was Freed in Bail of $2,500

Gives Statement to Press

Charges that officials of the Department of Labor had permitted a member of the Camorra, who is wanted by the Italian government on a charge of murder to escape by releasing him in $2,500 bail from Ellis Island, where he was being held pending the issuance of a Presidential warrant for his deportation, were made yesterday by newspaper man by Acting Captain Fiaschetti, head of the Italian squad of the Police Department.

The prisoner, Pietro Pimpinello, was arrested in this city by members of the Italian squad on July 18, and was held on July 22 without bail, pending a Presidential warrant. The prisoner was turned over to the authorities at Ellis Island.

Fiaschetti charges the prisoner's lawyer went to Washington and obtained his release on the low bail. Yesterday, when the case was called, neither Pimpinello nor his lawyer appeared, and his bail was declared forfeited.

Fled to U. S. After Murder

Pimpinello, who, according to the Italian Consul General, has a criminal record in his native country, is wanted by the Italian government on a charge of having shot and killed Pasquale Maiorano, of Santa Maria di Capua, the wealthiest man in the province of Caserta, on April 12, 1920. He escaped from Italy and came to the United States as a stowaway in May, 1920.

Fiaschetti said he was visited by the prisoner's brother, who declared he was willing to put up $5,000 to prevent Pimpinello's escape.

No further arrests were made yesterday by the police as a result of the confession of Bartolo Fontano. The prisoner, representing the articles of having shot and killed Pasquale Maiorano, of Santa Maria di Capua, the wealthiest man in the province of Caserta, on April 12, 1920. He escaped from Italy and came to the United States as a stowaway in May, 1920.

Fiaschetti said he was visited by the prisoner's brother, who declared he was willing to put up $5,000 to prevent Pimpinello's escape.

Ironmasters Lug Town a Mile, Set It Down, Dig Mine on Old Site

Rich Ore Under Hibbing, Minn., Causes Moving of 15,089 Persons, 200 Buildings and Water- works; Job Takes Three Years

The United States Steel Corporation is just completing in Minnesota the most extensive house-moving job in America. This is the transfer of the town of Hibbing, with a population of 15,089, and 200 buildings that were considered more worthy of moving to a new site than of destruction. The big moving now has taken three years.

Hibbing is in St. Louis County, northern Minnesota, in the Mesaba iron ore range, where since 1892 more iron has been mined than from any other iron region in America. In 1912 more than half of the iron ore dug in the United States came from this one range. Five of the country's largest mines are located within what was, three years ago, the village limits of Hibbing.

The town was founded by the late Henry W. Oliver, of Pittsburgh. Some years later the mine workings had become a bribe at the edge of which Hibbing, rich but barren progress, seemed to totter. The town decided to part itself in the middle. Buildings were moved, and when the shovels had turned Main Street into a deep gorge the halves of the town were connected by a bridge.

Hibbing stood this way for years. With 22,000,000 long tons of iron ore to its credit, it decided at last not to let pride of position stand in the way of adding more millions of tons to the total output, and so told the Steel Corporation.

Down on lower Broadway, in an office where the force takes for its serious guidance a wall motto saying "Can't Must Be Overcome," Judge Gary told one of the company's engineers to move the town of Hibbing, Minn., about a mile. The answer was, of course, "Right away."

This engineer, who has returned East now, went to Hibbing and inspected the surrounding country. He found a site, a better one, from a town-planning standpoint, than the original, and at once began the work of putting skills under all of the permanent buildings.

In addition to municipal and business buildings, Hibbing possessed a water-works and an electric light plant. The lighting plant was moved with the rest and a new water system provided.

The Oliver Mining Company, a subsidiary of the Steel Corporation, which had leased all of the mining privileges of Hibbing about twenty years ago, began to buy them outright when the town-moving was decided upon. With the company's money, the citizens bought up $2,500,000 worth of mine surface rights in an area of eight city blocks.

When Hibbing gets settled down in its new site and is ready to receive visitors it will put on a new doorknob. This will read: "New Hibbing."

Bandits Again Call on Horton; Miss $50,000

Masked Gang Invades Dor- mitory of Plant, Binds Guards to Cots and Takes $60 From Man's Pocket

Unable to Open the Safe

Force Working on Lower
Floors Unaware of Raid;
Burglars Sent Warning

Five armed and masked men gagged and bound employees of the Horton Ice Cream Company in the dormitory of the Horton Building, 205 East Twenty-fourth Street, early yesterday morning, then worked for an hour and forty minutes in an unseasonable effort to open the safe on the sixth floor containing $50,000. The bandits obtained $60.

Hiram Ayres, superintendent, who, with four other employees of the Horton company, all armed, slept on the seventh floor in a dormitory equipped for use of late workers, yesterday attributed the attempted safe breaking to the same gang which recently robbed Horton employees of the weekly payroll in front of the office building, escaping with $33,000. E. B. Lewis, president, said that after the previous robbery a letter was received from the bandits, thanking the company for its "handout" and promising to "call again."

Employees Tied to Cots

Mr. Ayres and his companions were tied to the cots on which they had been sleeping when the robbers entered by a rear fire escape. They were bound with cords of the window sash type. When the bandits entered they switched on the dormitory lights, leveled revolvers and ordered "hands up."

Employees sleeping in the dormitory aside from Superintendent Ayres were Harold Umpleby, Thomas Graham, John Murray, night clerk, and Graves, a watchman. While two of the men held revolvers on Ayres and his crew, others bound them to the cots. The $60 was taken from the coat of Ayres.

The employees secured, the bandits proceeded to the sixth floor. After working on the safe almost three-quarters of an hour the men were frightened off, probably by the sound of a freight elevator ascending. The elevator runs all night.

The police say the men engaged in the attempt were experienced burglars, as no finger marks or other tangible evidence was left by which their identity could be established.

Bandits Work on Schedule

According to Superintendent Ayres the bandits behaved with the utmost caution. After the bandits entered the dormitory one burglar ordered a subordinate to "throw the blankets over those poor boobies—they might catch cold."

Night Clerk John Murray was at his desk writing when the robbers first entered. They approached him from behind and ordered him to rise. He was then marched into the dormitory and bound with the others.

The night watchman was making rounds of the building when the robbers first entered. As he arrived at the seventh floor and got off the elevator he was met with a battery of guns and escorted to the dormitory. One man remained to guard the dormitory prisoners while the other four attempted to open the safe.

During the robbery, seventy-five employees were working on the lower floors of the plant. No inkling of what was going on came to them until detectives arrived from the East Twenty-second Street station.

The foolishness of a habit of casting shadows over the future, creating a pathway of gloom, is deplorable.

Try to break yourself of it. There is no use in tying knots in advance upon the string of days yet to come.

To do a faithful day's work at our post of duty day by day as they come along is enough.

ONLY 5 DAYS REMAIN IN WHICH TO PROCURE BELMAISON FURNITURE AT THE LOWERED AUGUST PRICES

A most interesting little sweater—with a brilliancy of coloring—in its unique design—at once distinctly bizarre and surprisingly attractive.

Fashioned of fiber silk knitted in a cubical design, each little square chooses to be a little different in color from its neighbor. The result of the independence is a delightful originality and gaiety of coloring that would add an extremely smart touch to the severity of the sports costume.

Other features that add to its charm are the carefully cut shoulders—the becoming round neckline—and the convenient little pockets.

In the darker or lighter colorings.

Price $22.50.

Second floor, Old Building.

A Mirror and a Table of Charming Proportions are shown in the illustration, typifying the delights of unmatched pieces which BELMAISON creates in its Reproduction Furniture.

The mirror, a Louis XV of Italian influence, has a shape so satisfying that the vainest beauty would take more joy in looking at the mirror itself than at her reflection within. The shell and the heavy blossoms in the overhanging crest of the top are characteristic and the soft gilt tone of the frame is lovely with almost any room's color plan. It was $160—now, for the August Sale, $80.

The pedestal table of a soft light walnut with a beautiful inlaid base, decorated with carved carving in acanthus leaves and egg and dart mouldings. $140—now, in the Sale, $110.

The table may also be had in painted style, in a blue green base and pedestal with gilt trimmings combined with a black top. $140, reduced to $110.

Police Molesting Soldier-Peddlers, Says La Guardia

Asks Enright to Order Men
To Be More Considerate;
Writes Calder on Tribune
Story of Spanish Recruits

F. H. La Guardia, President of the Board of Aldermen, yesterday wrote two letters on behalf of the veterans of the World War.

He addressed the first communication to Police Commissioner Enright, in which he said that members of the police force were molesting former soldiers who are street peddlers licensed by the state. Mr. La Guardia wrote that several instances of this interference by the police had been reported to him, and he asked that steps be taken to see that former soldiers were treated more considerately.

The aldermanic president said he had always felt that men who served their country in the World War were entitled to more than a mere license to peddle, but that "conditions being as they are, we must face them as we find them."

The letter followed the adoption of a resolution several days ago while Mr. La Guardia was speaking at the Audubon Council, asking him to take up the matter with the Police Department.

The second letter was addressed to Senator Calder. It read:

"May I call your attention to a front page article in The New York Tribune of yesterday, which paper I know you read daily when I was in Congress with you. Just think of an ex-serviceman joining the Spanish army to serve at 90 cents a day! Many penniless and hungry storm consulate enlist in Foreign Legion to fight against Moore."

The article also states that "All of them were ready to forswear allegiance to the United States and seek service under a foreign flag off the edge of the Sahara for 90 cents a day." Shame that there should be such a thing as an American being compelled to forswear his allegiance to the great Republic and the glorious flag because he is hungry and penniless. Why does Congress wait? Please do something about it."

Bomb Goes Off as Organ Plays 'You'd Be Surprised'

South Norwalk Lodging House
Damaged After Threatening
Notes Arrive From Brooklyn

SOUTH NORWALK, Conn., Aug. 24.—A bomb was exploded early to-day in a lodging house in Wood Street kept by Luigi Apicella. The front part of the three-story structure was badly torn. The material damage was not great. A month ago a bomb of less force did no damage, but an explosion several months ago wrecked the back step of the house.

Apicella says he has received letters signed "The Black Hand" demanding $4,000, a part of which he declares he has paid, but refused to settle the balance. Persons of Italian birth in newspapers here have received threatening letters. All appeared to have been mailed in Brooklyn. Apicella, formerly kept a saloon which was under constant scrutiny, the police say, because of the trouble among Italians who gathered there.

No police investigation found none of the occupants of the house hurt. The bomb was detonated by a timing arrangement, they thought. Several of the lodgers said that when they rushed into the room, heretofore a saloon, a mechanical organ was playing "You'd Be Surprised." Apicella said the mechanism must have been jarred into action by the explosion.

Detective Held in Slaying Haggerty Arrested in Court on Murder Indictment

When Detective Jeremiah Haggerty, of 4515 Park Avenue, the Bronx, accused of the fatal shooting of Joseph Lazaro on August 14, was arrested yesterday before Magistrate Simms, in West Farms Court, the court was informed of the indictment charging murder that was returned against Haggerty by the Bronx County Grand Jury Tuesday night.

The magistrate therefore dismissed the homicide complaint and the detective was rearrested by Captain Andrew Wines, of the 7th Detective District, on a bench warrant.

Haggerty was taken to Bronx County Jail to await arraignment before Supreme Court Justice Francis Martin.

The Change in Old Mr. Toad

By Thornton W. Burgess

Common blessings are the best; Better far than all the rest.

—Old Mr. Toad.

Old Mr. Toad lay sprawled out in a dish of water which had been put in the garden by Farmer Brown's boy for the birds. That Old Mr. Toad might need water hadn't entered the head of Farmer Brown's boy. But he did need it quite as much as the birds, and now that he had found it he was enjoying it in his own quiet way. He was drinking all over. Yes, sir, that is what he was doing. Instead of taking the water in his mouth and swallowing it he was soaking it through his skin. That is his way of drinking.

"I should say that you are taking a bath, not drinking," said Peter Rabbit.

Old Mr. Toad rolled his beautiful golden eyes toward Peter and in them was a look of pure contentment. "Have it your own way, Peter," said he. "I am getting a bath, but that doesn't prevent getting a drink at the same time. I'm a changed Toad already."

He spoke truly. He was a changed Toad. Even Peter could see that. When Peter had met him a short time before he had been a forlorn-looking Toad. He had looked thin and shrunken. He had looked sick. His golden eyes, usually so bright and beautiful, had been dull. There had been no sparkle in them.

Now those eyes were as bright and sparkling and beautiful as ever. More than this, Old Mr. Toad had grown plump and was getting more so. He no longer seemed thin and shrunken. He was swelling out. Yet Peter knew that he hadn't swallowed a single drop of water. He knew because he had been there all the time and had watched closely. It must be as Old Mr. Toad said. It must be that the water actually soaked in through the skin. It was hard to believe, but he couldn't doubt his own eyes. He had to believe them. That is why he called how very thin was the old skin he had seen. Old Mr. Toad took off and swam one day his way of changing is suit you know.

"I suppose your skin is as thin as mine," said Peter.

"I should say that you are taking a bath, not drinking," said Peter Rabbit.

Old Mr. Toad rolled his beautiful golden eyes toward Peter and in them was a look of pure contentment. "Have it your own way, Peter," said he. "I am getting a bath, but that doesn't prevent getting a drink at the same time. I'm a changed Toad already."

Inspector Exonerates Patrolman in Shooting

Finds No Evidence Moran Fired
Shot Which Hit Man in Third Avenue Poolroom

Police Inspector Thomas V. Underhill announced yesterday, after an investigation into the shooting, on Monday, of Edmond Clayton, twenty-one years old, of 230 East Eighty-third Street, in a poolroom at 1413 Third Avenue, that Patrolman William J. Moran Jr., of the West Forty-seventh Street police station, was in no way responsible for the affair and that the charges against him were therefore dismissed.

Moran may be tried on a charge of being absent without leave.

Four witnesses were called by the inspector, including the officer and the victim, and as a result there was no evidence found that showed Moran had anything to do with the shooting.

Clayton said that he saw the police officer on the street before he went into the poolroom and that when the officer asked him to go in, he simply named Moran as his usual attendant because the latter was the only one he had seen whom he knew.

Joseph Scheska, proprietor of the poolroom in the door of which Clayton was shot, corroborated Moran's statement that the latter was not in the room when the gun was discharged.

Moran added that he was in the neighborhood at the time, but said he walked away before the shot was fired. His first knowledge of the shooting came, he said, when he returned to his home, in Rockaway, and his mother told him detectives wanted him. He explained his unauthorized absence by saying he was ill and had relied on a friend to go into his police station.
